WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

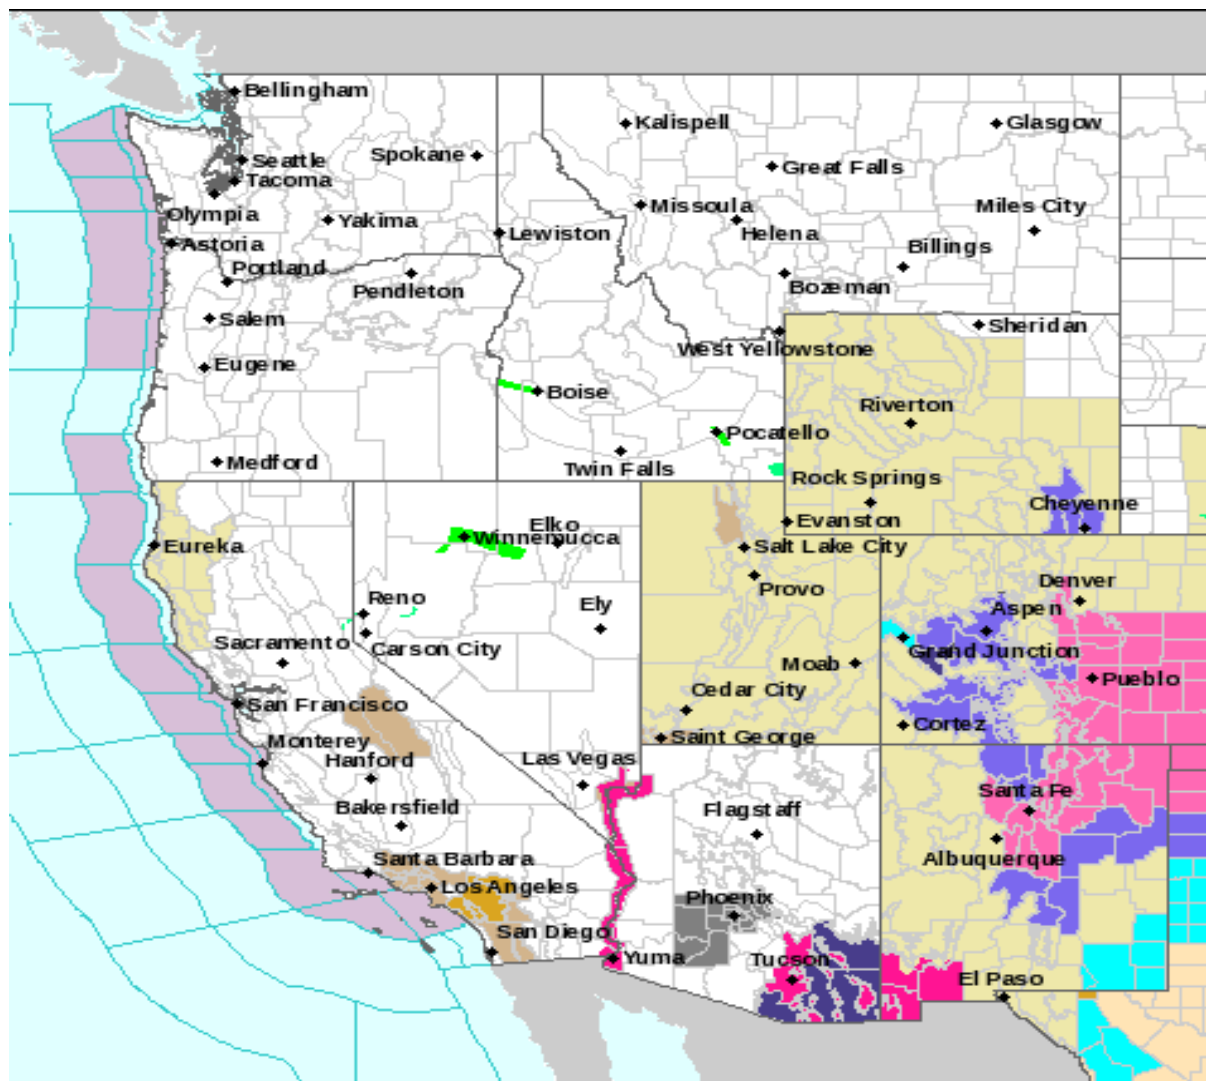

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

Temperatures will increase from near normal today to 7-10 degrees above normal by Sunday. This time next week looks mild to warm and mostly dry, but with occasional mountain showers or thunderstorms during the middle and end of the week.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Today, the flow will transition to the northeast which will cause winds to increase across northern Los Angeles County and Ventura County as well as areas of the Inland Empire and northern Orange County. Expect offshore winds of 15-30 mph with occasional higher gusts Saturday morning before winds taper off in the afternoon. The Colorado River Valley will also see strong north winds of 20-30 mph with gusts to 50 mph the next couple of days. Weak onshore flow may allow for some cooling near the coast Sunday, but it will remain very warm inland throughout the weekend. Expect high temperatures to climb into the lower 90s Saturday through the middle of next week across the valleys of Southern California, but some marine layer coverage may return to the coasts. RH will drop to around 15% in the valleys and lower foothills each day. Recovery will be poor over inland areas of Southern California tonight and Saturday night, but better recovery may occur early next week. Temperatures may trend downward toward next weekend. No rain is expected through the period.
